For 15 years, Feminist.com has served as a vital source of information around issues that are important to women and girls. Our mission is to empower people to re-imagine and transform the roles of women and men and encourage them to break barriers so they can be agents of social change in the world. Feminist.com provides a platform for women and respected organizations to discuss and promote pressing issues including violence against women, gender equality, environmental sustainability, and peace. Visited each month by more than 150,000 people from around the world, Feminist.com connects individuals to the causes, issues and organizations that resonate with them, leveraging the massive potential of the Web to connect, educate and empower.

When Feminist.com was launched in 1995, it propelled feminism onto the Internet by serving as the first official web home for many important nonprofits including the Ms. Foundation for Women, Equality Now, Girls Inc., and V-Day. Today, we have partnerships with and columns from a wide diversity of organizations that not only include many of the above groups, but a range of others, such as Women for Women International, MomsRising, The White House Project, The Women's Media Center, The Nobel Women's Initiative and the Younger Women's Task Force. Feminist.com features cutting-edge news reports, original articles, and speeches and interviews with some of the most influential women of our time, including Gloria Steinem, Eve Ensler, Jane Fonda, Alice Walker, and Madeleine Albright. We also offer a popular advice column, "Ask Amy," in which activist and author Amy Richards (Opting In, Grassroots, Manifesta) fields questions from our readers on a variety of topics including politics, reproductive rights, sexual harassment, violence against women, women's history, work/career issues, and women and the media.

Feminist.com has future plans to expand with a site redesign and the addition of several exciting new sections. These include Young Voices, an innovative initiative in collaboration with and inspired by the work of Carol Gilligan, that will raise awareness about and offer resources on how cultural assumptions about gender affect the learning and development of both boys and girls; Men and Women as Allies, a co-branded mini-site with partner organization Men Can Stop Rape (MCSR) that will provide opportunities for people of all genders to explore what it means for men and women to collaborate in pursuit of gender equality, to positively redefine masculinity, and to work towards creating cultures free of violence; Global Women, a section in partnership with the Sisterhood is Global Institute (SIGI) with the goal of including resources, outreach and journalistic dispatches that address issues specific to women and girls internationally; Women and Peace, a section dedicated to showcasing women's peacemaking work around the world and better understanding women's roles in building peace; and finally, Our Inner Lives: Spirit, Faith & Action, a thoughtful exploration of and dialogue on issues of spirituality, religion and faith, an evolving section which launched earlier this year.

Feminist.com has always understood that the exchange of resources and ideas among women around the world is critical to achieving equality and positive social change. We are proud to be a thriving online community, rich with voices and information that inspire optimism and action.
